

VIDEOCONFERENCING

The best things in life are free...or so the saying goes anyway. But when the professional image of your business is at stake, free can sometimes feel a bit, well...cheap!

When you're chatting to your mum or catching up with far-flung friends, video quality is not so critical, but if it's a big client or a major sales meeting, crackly audio and stuttery pictures just don't cut it.

Here's a quick guide on why it's worth paying a few pounds a month rather than relying on a free service:

Quality and reliability

Free services offer no guarantee of audio or video quality so if you're mid-flow in a big meeting and things get sketchy... YOU'RE ON YOUR OWN.

Talk and Vision GUARANTEE audio and video quality.

Multiple participants

Free services are restrictive allowing only one-to-one only calls, a small number of participants and 'fair usage' policies giving you limited minutes a day/month.

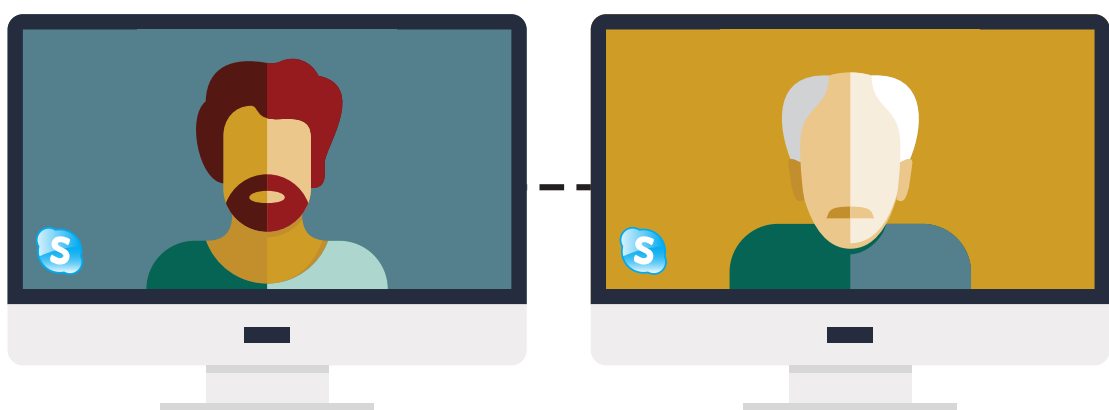

Talk and Vision can accommodate up to 80 participants in a single meeting and as much time online as you want.

Invite participants

Free services only allow you to talk to someone using the same system as you.

Talk and Vision allows anyone with a web browser and webcam to join a meeting.

Share content

Some free services allow you to share content on screen, but at the expense of the video screen.

free

Talk and vision allows screen-in-screen video conferencing for a more engaging experience.

Support & assistance

Free services only have limited support and take no responsibility if things don't work. After all, you get what you pay for.

Talk and Vision offer 24/7 support by phone/ email and video call.
